RUTH SNYDER AND GRAY MEET DEATH BRAVELY

Tomb-Like Silence Marks The Execution of Sashweight Murderers

PRAYERS ON THEIR LIPS

Three Shocks Send Woman To Death; Five Minutes Later Man Dies

By James L. Kilgallen
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

SING SING PRISON, OSSINING, N. Y., Jan. 13.—Tomb-like silence.

Ruth Snyder in the electric chair. The crunching sound of the executioner ramming down a lever. A sinister whine and a crackling, sputtering sound like a Fourth of July sparkler. Silence. Another sputter. Silence—terrible silence that strained the eardrums and bore down like a terrific weight on the nerves of the eye-witnesses.

And then the prison physician breaking the silence with these words:

"I declare this woman dead."

Thus the woman who in gayer days was beautiful "Tommy" Snyder died. And gamely, too, with a prayer on her lips:

"Forgive me, Father, for I have sinned. Jesus, have mercy on me. Forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do."

And a few minutes later her former sweetheart, Henry Judd Gray, died in the same chair, just as courageously and much in the same manner.

Three shocks were required to electrocute Ruth, two to send Judd into eternity. Thus, as Kipling said:

"The sins ye do by two and two Ye must pay for one by one."

They had paid the extreme penalty for the sashweight murder of stolid, middle-aged Albert Snyder, the art editor who "didn't understand" his young wife, and whom they killed while he slept in the dead of the night on March 20, 1927.

Ruth entered the chamber of death at 11:01 p. m. There was a rap at the door, over which was printed in large letters the ironical sign: "Silence." She was supported by two matrons, Mrs. Lillian Hickey and Mrs. Mary Mary, and a guard. She was preceded by the Rev. John McCafferty, the prison chaplain.

Her light blue eyes gleamed brightly. Her determined chin was held high, and it trembled ever so slightly. Her lips quivered as she responded to the intonations of the priest who was reciting the Litaney. Her shoulders sagged and there were deep, grief-stricken creases in her face.

Her blonde, bobbed hair was carefully trimmed and seemed to be wet, as if she had just combed it. It was slicked down smoothly. A patch had been clipped from the back of her head to make place for the electrode. She wore a brown smock, over a black, knee length calico skirt. She was assisted tenderly to the chair by the two matrons.

The stocking of her right leg was rolled down to the ankle so that the electrode could be applied to the bare skin. She wore black cotton stockings.

She broke down and wept just as she sat in that terrible contraption known as the "death chair" with its straps and buckles, and broad oaken arms. She cried and prayed at the same time. "Jesus, have mercy on me, for I have sinned." Her voice had a peculiar refined tone, albeit high pitched and tremulous. Her face was strangely old.

The silence was deadly, broken only by the woman's prayerful mutterings and the intonations of the priest.

A black mask was placed over her face. It covered her blanched countenance in two parts, the upper half hiding most of her forehead and nose and the lower part completely covering her chin.

In the twinkling of an eye, two guards pressed a leather helmet—a regulation football helmet—over her head. The two matrons had drawn away, to the right. One of them, Mrs. Hickey, sobbed softly, a handkerchief to her eyes.

Guards quickly and deftly fastened a heavy black strap across her heaving breast. They buckled another strap across her quivering knees.

"Jesus have mercy," came the pitiful cry from the woman in the chair. The gaunt, hollow-eyed executioner Robert Elliott, who was doing this grisly job for $150, quickly stepped to his alcove at right angles from the chair. His face was drawn, as if weighted down by sashweights.

The seconds crawled as slowly as wounded soldiers dragging themselves across a battlefield.

Twenty newspapermen, including this writer, sat transfixed—fascinated by the ghastly scene. We were seated five in a row, in what resembled church pews. The only other witnesses in the room were four doctors and the attendants. The face of the reporter to my left was deathly pale and he looked longingly at the barred door.

FARMERS MEET TO PLAN BETTER CATTLE HERDS

Plan System Whereby New Accredited Free Areas Can Be Established

BEST MARKET IN WORLD

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 13.—The fact that in several of the townships of Bucks county there are accredited free areas from cattle tuberculosis, has attracted the attention of cattlemen, farmers and bankers from this section of Bucks county.

Bankers as well as farmers believe the golden opportunity has arrived to secure good foundation herds and breed some more cattle to supply the market.

In order that some system may be figured out whereby new accredited free areas can be established in the county, a meeting of the directors and officers of the Doylestown National Bank and the executive committee of the Bucks County Guernsey Cattle Breeders' Association was held this week in the offices of the Doylestown National Bank.

Not only is it a proven fact that Bucks county can breed the best in Guernseys, but Bucks county has the best market in the world right at her door for her cattle and their products. Situated as Bucks county is located, farmers in this county are in the most densely populated district of the United States in the midst of large cities from Boston to Baltimore.

In discussing the cattle situation in Bucks county, William F. Fretz, of Pipersville, secretary of the Bucks county Guernsey Breeders' Association, said:

"It is interesting to note that probably one of the greatest foundation cows at Langwater Farms was bred in Bucks county, namely, Dolly Bloom 12770, with three A. R. records, the highest 17297.51 milk, 836.21 fat. Bred by the late Ezra Michener, Carversville, and sold in 1902 to F. L. Ames, Langwater Farms. Dolly Bloom was the dam of Jethro Bass, Langwater Monarch. Dolly Bloom of Langwater and the great Dolly Dimple who held the world's record for nine years in Class D, with a record of 18458.80 lbs. milk, 906.89 lbs. fat, and became the dam of Dolly Dimple's May King of Langwater who sired the famous Langwater Nancy with record of 18783.50 milk, 1011.66 fat, also the sire of Langwater Demonstrator, sire of 72 A. R. daughters, some of which sold at the dispersal sale at Mister Farm as high as $12,000; also the sire of Ne Plus Ultra who has sired more 700 lb. daughters than any Guernsey bull, and is conceded to be the greatest sire the Guernsey breed ever produced; also sire of Langwater Cavalier, and many other good ones."

"From Dolly, the great foundation cow of Langwater Farms, bred in Bucks county, have probably descended more good Guernseys through her sons and daughters, than any cow of the Guernsey breed. Among her direct descendants is Shuttlewick Levity, the record priced cow of the breed, and the grand champion cow at all the leading shows this last Fall, including the grand championship at the National Dairy Show, and what is still more interesting, the foundation cow was not only bred in Bucks county, but her direct descendant, Shuttlewick Levity, was sold within a few miles of Bucks county, at Trenton, on November 14, 1924, at public auction for $22,000, the record price of the breed. A few weeks later at private sale, she sold for $25,500. At this same sale, six females of this family sold for $72,000 and one sire, Itchen King for $2100, since sold at private sale for $10,000. Forty-eight head of Guernseys at this sale sold for $134,350, an average price of $2,798.95."

Dolly Bloom, it was explained by Mr. Fretz, is not the only foundation cow sent out from Bucks county. Buyers from many states have come to Bucks county to select foundation herds and a number of carloads were shipped by the late George W. Ott, A. J. Snyder and Fritzlynn Farms.

As a result of the meeting this week the bankers of this section of the county agreed to assist farmers in securing better herds. By applying to the Doylestown National Bank and the Solebury National Bank at New Hope, the details of the plan will be outlined. It was announced at the meeting that in the near future the bankers may arrange for a sale of thoroughbred cattle in the county.

"VOICE FROM THE SKY" AROUSES RESIDENTS HERE AS AIRPLANE FLIES HIGH OVER THE BOROUGH

Much Interest and Excitement on Part of Townspeople As Voice Calls To Them from Out of The Air — A Modern Invention

"A voice from the sky" yesterday afternoon held the residents of Bristol spellbound as they stretched their necks and gazed into the air in an endeavor to see just what was happening up there.

The voice came from an airplane through huge amplifiers. This new means of communication is established as a result of the untiring efforts and faith of its inventors covering a period of almost five years of continuous experimental development. Such problems as the filtration of motor noise, vibrations, etc., have been successfully solved. The plane motors are in operation during the announcements though sometimes throttled down. Valuable patent awards have been obtained in this and foreign countries and in view of the pioneer work of the inventors these awards are recognized as such.

The association of the technical experts of the Bell Laboratory, Western Electric, Graybar and many other authorities has done much to bring the "Voice of the Sky" to the greatest stage of development that modern science and invention can accomplish in communication as applied to an airplane in flight at high altitudes.

Within thirty days practically all of the important cities of the East and South will have heard the "Voice of the Sky." This major aeronautical operation is sponsored by the P. Lorillard Tobacco Company and is being used to emphasize the merits of "Old Gold" Cigarettes.

The Voice of the Sky Inc., sole operators of this new service of communication is a comparatively new organization composed of some of America's leading aeronautical experts.

TOWNSHIP SUPERVISORS FINED FOR BAD ROAD

Three Doylestown Township Men Convicted of Failure To Make Proper Repairs

NEGLECTED THEIR DUTY

DOYLESTOWN, Pa., Jan. 13.—At a hearing here yesterday at which time they were charged with failing to keep a township road in proper repair for safe travel, three Doylestown township road supervisors who were arrested last week, were each fined $50 and costs.

Those fined include William L. Moore, G. Frank Shutt and Aaron Godshall, all of Doylestown township. Moore has been a road supervisor for twenty-two years. The fines were imposed by Justice Irvin M. James. The case was appealed to the County Court.

The prosecutor in the case is Louis W. Army, who has a large country place on the dirt road under dispute. The road runs north from the Doylestown and Chalfont concrete highway, near New Britain.

Witnesses at the hearing described the road as unsafe for travel of motor cars and that it was cruelty to animals to drive horses over the road. Persons in all walks of life, living along the road, including an opera singer, a retired business man, farmers and many others, said they were afraid to leave their homes because of getting stuck in the mud.

EDUCATION'S PROGRESS DWELT ON BY SPEAKER

L. R. DeLong, of State College, Addresses Fathers' Ass'n Meeting

PAULINETTI PLEASES

Modern educational methods and the development and progress which education has made was told in an interesting way last night when Professor L. R. DeLong, Assistant Director of Extension Work, State College, addressed a meeting of the Fathers' Association in the high school auditorium.

The speaker said that no longer do teachers instruct pupils in the first grade in the alphabet. They are first taught to read and then later they learn the alphabet and are thus able to look up certain words and their meanings.

Professor DeLong went into detail and explained how methods of education differed today from those which existed when many in the audience attended school. He told the fathers not to think it strange because their children were not being taught as they were instructed. Education has advanced and it has advanced rapidly.

Previous to the address of Professor DeLong there were several stunts by Mr. Paulinetti, an acrobat of note.

In the absence of President Paynter the meeting was presided over by V. V. Vansant, Committees for the ensuing year were announced and reports were made by the treasurer and also by the chairman of the recent minstrel.

MOTOR BUS OWNER WINS DAMAGE SUIT BEFORE JUDGE RYAN

Action the Result of Accident Which Occurred Last May

JURY BLAMES THE BOY

Holds That He Was Guilty Of Contributory Negligence

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 13.—In a suit for damages for injuries sustained in a crash between a motor passenger bus and a bicycle near Grundy's Corner on May 9, 1927, a jury returned a verdict for the defendant in the case of Thomas Grafenstine, 16, by his father, Henry Grafenstine, against Theodore Heller, of Newportville, operator of the bus line.

In the trial of the case the plaintiffs, Thomas Grafenstine and his father were represented by Senator Clarence J. Buckman, of Langhorne. The defendant was represented by Howard I. James, of Bristol. The jury found that the boy was guilty of contributory negligence in the case and did not award a verdict to him or to his father.

Evidence produced in the trial was that following the collision, which happened on Sunday, young Grafenstine was taken to the Harriman Hospital, where he remained for close to three months before being discharged. The case was tried before Judge William C. Ryan in Court No. 1.

A jury in Court No. 2 returned a verdict for $229.96, the amount of the claim with interest, in the case of Lewis T. Foster and Walter R. Dome, trading as Lansdale Heating Supplies Company, against Donald R. Richards, of Richlandtown. The case was an action in assumpsit. In the trial the plaintiffs were represented by Stewart Nase, of Lansdale, and Samuel B. Stilwell, of Doylestown. The defendant was represented by Robert G. Hendricks, of Doylestown.

Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, in Court No. 2 directed a verdict in the sum of $316.16 in the case of John Lucas & Company, a corporation, against Samuel Katz, of Neshaminy. Both sides agreed as to the amount of the claim and the verdict was directed.

A case that has been in the court of Common Pleas for over a year was disposed of in Court No. 2 before Judge Shull, when he reversed the judgment of Justice of the Peace Mahlon Keller, of Perkasie, in an appeal taken by the Commonwealth against David M. Chandres, of Philadelphia. Judge Shull discharged the defendant.

Chandres was arrested by Constable Kilmer, of Perkasie, after it was alleged he had sold dress goods at a public auction at Argus, Bucks county, on Jan. 29. Constable Kilmer swore out the information that Chandres sold the goods as a hawker and peddler, contrary to a state law. Justice Keller imposed a fine of $50 and costs upon Chandres and an appeal was taken. It was charged that Chandres sold goods that he did not manufacture himself and that he sold them as a hawker and peddler.

In his defense, Chandres claimed that he consigned the goods to the Argus auction and to other auctions, and that it was sold for him by the auction.

Judge Shull ruled there was no violation of the law. He reversed Justice Keller's decision and discharged the defendant. In the trial of the case, Mark Thatcher, of Perkasie, represented the Commonwealth, while Chandres was represented by John L. DuBois, Doylestown.

COLLEGE FOR ALL

Despite more difficult entrance requirements and adoption of various schemes for limiting the number of students, more young men and women are in college today than ever. Ninety institutions of higher learning this year have a registration of 297,000 full time students as compared with 283,000 at this time last year. The gain is 4.82 per cent.

There is little reason to worry over the great and growing number of young men and young women who desire college training. The country has prospered during the years in which increasing number of graduates were being turned out into the world. Certainly, it cannot be proved that a single one of these graduates did not benefit from his college training. The insatiable appetite of American youth for higher education is the most significant and healthy sign that could be exhibited in connection with the future development of the country.

Not long ago many college presidents had the labor of not only gathering funds but often of recruiting students. Success was to some extent measured by a growing student body. But now the schools, finding themselves all but overwhelmed by the influx of students, have decided they must keep the numbers down to teachable units, of teachable minds. The great problem of the schools today is the selection, retention and promotion of under-graduates.

TRAFFIC DELAYS COSTLY

Control of motor traffic continues to be one of the most vexatious municipal problems of the day; and despite adoption of various well-planned signal systems and employment of many clever devices calculated to increase safety and to insure uniform and orderly movement of the vehicular procession, the inconveniences experienced by motorists and pedestrians alike increase rather than diminish.

Partial relief may have to come about through closer regulation of heavy trucking. In congested districts it may become necessary to prohibit delivery of building materials during rush hours. Coal should be put in when traffic is light. Sidewalk loading and unloading should be timed so it will not obstruct traffic. The time is unquestionably coming when a greater use of the night hours will be made for trucking and deliveries of goods.

Conditions in small cities and towns are scarcely less acute than those in the big cities. Every community, however small, has its dangerous intersections, and local resources are taxed to the utmost to maintain even a semblance of reasonable control.

Motors at rest offer a problem as baffling as those in motion. To park or not to park is the daily question in every live town in the United States. In most cities parking space is inadequate and garage facilities are limited, with the result that traffic congestion is increased and everybody is inconvenienced.

The transition of the motor car from a luxury to a necessity has been so swift and sudden and universal that the country has been unable to adjust itself to the new conditions.

The best minds in the country are grappling with these problems and it is hoped they soon will solve them and the solution will mark a new and more beneficent period in the age of gasoline.

CHAPTER I

"Yes.... Yes, this is Mr. Gilbert's office.... No, Mr. Gilbert hasn't come in yet.... Yes, this is his secretary.... O, yes, Mr. Frazier.... What?.... No, I will not have lunch with you—now, or after your divorce, or any other time!"

Bang! Myra Martin replaced the telephone receiver on its hook with such force that the brass inkwell on the desk before her tremblingly splattered a stray drop of blue fluid on its immaculate tray. Frowning, she turned to the papers piled in front of her and with impatient angry fingers leafed through them. The frown deepened as she lingered over their contents. "... that setting aside all business and excuses whatsoever, you be and appear in your proper person, before our Judges.... to answer the said petition or libel.... and a decree of divorce granted against you in your absence. Witness.... in the year of...."

Divorce subpoenas, all of them. She took up a pencil and began making notations on a pad, smiling somewhat cynically. This business of being secretary to one of the most prominent divorce lawyers in Los Angeles was not calculated to create any great amount of faith in human nature or a belief in the artful powers of an Eros, no matter how beguiling he be. What with dealing with marital troubles printed in cold black and white and married men scarce freed from the yoke attempting to make overtures to their lawyer's pretty secretary—probably because she was the nearest woman within arm's reach—

The telephone buzzed noisily. "Yes?... Yes, Mr. Sheldon.... No, Mr. Gilbert's not come in yet.... Yes, I'll tell him.... Yes, good bye."

Myra shrugged her shoulders, ran her slender fingers through her

"This had better be changed to—why, what's the matter, Myra?" He glanced up at the girl beside him. "You look worried. Anything the matter?"

"O, I don't know, Leonard," Myra shrugged her shoulders. "I was going over these papers and I just began to wonder whether after we are married you'll be like all these—these other people." She swept her hands over the papers.

"Silly dear," he laughed, and covered her hands with his own. "Stop thinking such nonsense. Why, with these as examples I'm sure to profit and become the most staid of devoted husbands. Now, does that make you happy?" The twinkling lines about his blue eyes crinkled with merriment, and Myra laughed.

"O, I suppose I am foolish, but just seeing so much of this sort of thing makes me wonder...."

"Well, forget all about that," Gilbert patted her arm tenderly. "Run along, now. I can't get any work done with you bothering me this way." He gave her a gentle push towards the door. "O, and don't forget to get in touch with Evans.... his case comes up Monday."

"All right, I won't," Myra turned towards her own office.

Gilbert followed with his eyes the trim ankles and slender figure so business-like in its neat, mannish suit, and the small, well-set head with its wealth of lustrous hair. Then, with a sigh, he turned to his work.

As Myra closed the door after her she turned to face a thick, heavy set man whose bald head gleamed in the shadowed office. "Good morning, Mr. Milton," she turned with some asperity to her desk. There, in front of her, reposed a large, purple box, evidently concealing within its depths nothing less than orchids. She looked soft, brown hair, and turned once more to her work. What on earth was the matter with people, anyhow? In her small corner of the world it looked as though there never was, never had been, and never would be a man and a woman who could possibly adjust themselves to each other for any length of time. Bickering, quarreling, running off with other men's wives and other women's husbands, never satisfied with their own selections, always on the lookout for a new face, a new figure, a new thrill—anything, just so it was new.

"Now does that make you happy?"

The door from the outer office opened.

"Ah, good morning, Miss Martin," Leonard Gilbert, tall, angular, well groomed, removed his hat and bowed solemnly to his secretary.

"Good morning, Mr. Gilbert," Myra rose and gathered up her papers, placing them sedately on the corner of her desk.

Gilbert closed the door, and walked over to his secretary and deliberately kissed her.

"Why, Mr. Gilbert! How dare you!" Myra looked so severely, and then her gray eyes began to twinkle and they both laughed.

"How are you this morning, dear?" Gilbert asked, releasing her. "Did you have plenty of sleep? You mustn't try to get in too early, you know, I can't have the future Mrs. Gilbert slaving herself to death for the sake of an office. What's happened this morning? Any calls?" He picked up Myra's memorandum pad.

at the man and noted his beaming content smile.

"Good morning, Miss Martin," he greeted her hopefully. "Just—ah—just a little offering—a token of my esteem."

He waved his hand airily towards the box.

"Thank you, Mr. Milton," Myra returned with a baleful glare. "You wanted to see Mr. Gilbert about the divorce?"

"Why—er—yes—I—"

"I'll see if he's engaged," Myra picked up the phone.

"Just a minute Miss Martin," Milton caught at the hand that was already lifting the receiver. "I really stopped in to see you—to ask you—that is, you know I have a rather charming, quiet apartment downtown, here, and I thought you—that is—we might have dinner there this evening. Won't you take pity on a lonely, almost-bachelor? What do you say?"

Myra drew herself up scornfully. "Mr. Milton," she began haughtily, "I will not have dinner with you to-night in your apartment, or any other night, so far as that goes I'm not at all surprised that your wife is divorcing you. Now, if you want to see Mr. Gilbert, I'll call him." She phoned the inner office and in a few moments opened the door and allowed the quelled Mr. Milton to pass silently within.

OLD GOLD'S VOICE FROM THE SKY

Here's the big airplane, "The Voice of the Sky," that yesterday broadcast the message of Old Gold Cigarettes over Bristol. This huge ship, a Fokker, is an exact duplicate of the plane that carried Commander Byrd to the North Pole. It is driven by three motors, weighs six tons, and carries a crew of five. The powerful amplifiers, through which the sound is transmitted from the clouds, have a range of several miles from an altitude of 3,000 feet.

"Voice From the Sky" Arouses Residents Here

troils and instruments. The cabin is glass enclosed and furnished with a view-finder in the floor. The enormous power required for operating the amplifying apparatus is generated in an ingenious manner from the ship's motors during flight.

The amplifiers are powered directly from special built fan-generators operating at constant, unvarying speed. The great projectors through which spoken message or music is transmitted from the sky to earth, have a range of several miles in ground area and distance from an altitude of three to ten thousand feet.

The announcers talk into a specially constructed transmitter. The vocal sounds enter the transmitter, are transformed into electrical impulses or waves, are then subjected to tremendous stages of amplification and reconverted back to actual sounds which in turn are shot earthward through the giant projectors. So great is the sound that a single message can be heard by thousands of people on the ground and in buildings at one instant.

The projectors open up in the floor of the fuselage and can usually be seen from below when the plane passes overhead. The announcers are Fred W. Bell and Herbert G. McGrath, two expert radio announcers well known through the popular radio stations of New York City. These announcers go through a special course of training to fit them for aerial communication work. Their experiences as "skylarks" are something new to the realm of public announcers and entertainers. Theirs are the greatest audiences ever entertained by man through direct air wave communication. Their audiences are visible and need no mechanical receiving apparatus or devices. This is the great difference between radio communication and the plane-speaker apparatus. The latter drives its sound through air waves not ether.

The "Voice of the Sky" can reach and communicate with people when practically all other means of communication break down or are destroyed. When wires are down it can carry communication to remote or isolated places at remarkable speed. No radio connections are needed for reception.

In cases of earthquakes, floods, forest fires and general destruction by tornadoes, etc., it sets up a means of communication meeting exigencies immediately.

Its military value is instantly recognized by strategists for observation, troop control, inter-communication in code between headquarters staffs and vessel to vessel control and communication during naval operations. Flying above smoke screens, its vantage point in naval battles is unique. The movements of submarines can be watched and reported by the "Voice of the Sky."

The "Voice of the Sky" speaks all languages and foreign operations, expeditions, exploration, etc., can be conducted with greater safety and far greater speed than has heretofore been possible.

Atwater Kent Winners Start Their Education

Banking their $10,000 cash prizes and packing away their laurel wreaths, bouquets and congratulatory telegrams, Miss Agnes Davis and Wilbur Evans, the Denver soprano and Philadelphia baritone, who won first place in the Atwater Kent Foundation's National Radio Audition, have started to collect the second part of the Audition reward—two years' musical conservatory scholarship, which is intended to make them even greater singers.

Both of these young soloists, who outclassed 50,000 other vocalists in the Audition, have been accepted as personal pupils of Emilio de Gogorza, the world-renowned baritone, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera in New York and now a celebrated concert artist.

To musicians, that announcement spells a triumph for Agnes Davis and Evans—for de Gogorza takes less than half a dozen pupils, and those who, after severest tests, convince him that they can be developed into singers of the finest operatic quality. No amount of money or "pull" could secure the services of de Gogorza for a pupil he felt was unworthy of his time.

For two years de Gogorza will personally tutor Miss Davis and Wilbur Evans, at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. He promises that nothing short of a collapse of the young soprano's health will prevent him from turning her out a Metropolitan prima donna, and is equally as confident of young Evans' future operatic success.

Evans has been studying under de Gogorza at the Curtis Institute for three years, pluckily acquiring funds for these valued lessons by various tasks such as teaching swimming to children, chauffeuring and clerking. Now, as the Atwater Kent Foundation's protegee, he can concentrate his efforts on making his winning voice even finer. Next summer, expending part of the Foundation's cash award, he will accompany de Gogorza to Paris, for advanced study there. Miss Davis also is planning to study abroad next summer.

Other famous Metropolitan Opera artists, at the Curtis Institute, direct classes in languages, acting and all the allied arts needed for a career in grand opera. Miss Davis and Evans will have everything of this sort that time permits.

Frequently the young singers will be taken over to New York to the opera and various musical and social functions. They also will give concerts themselves over the radio, from time to time. Miss Davis having been presented in the Atwater Kent Radio Hour, January 8 through the National Broadcasting Company and 23 associated radio stations, and Evans being scheduled to sing with Mme.

Louise Homer, premier contralto, in the same hour, January 22. In addition, they are considering arrangements for short concert tours, including recitals at Washington, D. C., Raleigh, N. C., and other centers.

Winners of second and third places in the National Radio Audition, who also received scholarships of one year each, are preparing to start this study. Ted A. Roy, "the singing blacksmith" of Corvallis, Ore., who placed second, has arranged to complete his studies at Oregon State College, graduating in 1929, before taking up the musical scholarship.

Miss Emilia Da Prato, of South San Francisco, Cal., who placed second in the ladies' division, and Marie Bronarsky, of Chicago, and Ben P. De Loache, Jr., Asheville, N. C., third place winners, are expected to decide soon where they will study.

WHISKY

According to stories that are afloat, especially those that a certain class of people delight in telling, there is a lot of "bad" whisky in circulation these days. But so far as the effect of it is concerned, it is very much like the "good" whisky that was common in the pre-Volstead days.—Religious Telescope.—(Adv.)

YOU FOLKS WITH ACHES AND PAINS CAN GET QUICK RELIEF

Nationally Known Baseball Trainer Says It Does Not Matter Whether It Is Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuralgia or Neuritis

LINIMENT HE USES ON BIG LEAGUE BALL PLAYERS STOPS PAIN QUICK

Tells How To Stop Pains, Aches, Lame Back Quickly

READ WHAT THIS EXPERT SAYS BELOW

For twenty-five years I have studied how to keep men in perfect physical condition and my experience makes me certain I can take a person no matter how much they ache and hurt, from rheumatism, lame back, neuritis, lumbago, or neuralgia, and quickly have them feeling like running a foot race or a home run.

Ball players after getting up a sweat often play an inning or two in the rain and then damp, cold and chilled to the bone, catch trains, with result that next day they show up at the ball park so crippled with rheumatism, lameness and stiff joints that they can hardly walk. An ordinary liniment would never fix them up quickly, but the liniment we use does the trick, declares Mike Martin, genial trainer of the Washington Baseball Club.

FANS KNOW MIKE

So many people with rheumatism, lame backs, neuritis and neuralgia have wanted this liniment which we use at the ball park that bottles are mailed all over the country and now it can be obtained at any good drug store, in small bottles for a few cents.

MIKE MARTIN, Trainer
Washington Baseball Club

Just ask for Mike Martin's Liniment. It is guaranteed to be the finest, speediest liniment made and will bring complete relief to user or money refunded. Folder enclosed with each bottle tells how to use this liniment. It is a wonderful liniment. No man or woman with aches or pains should do without it.—(Adv.)

MARTIN'S CHRISTMAS
by Clara Adge Hays

Martin jaded his knife into the block, folded the apron gingerly, and jammed it into a hamper in the back room. He sighed.

"By Golly! The first time I've had even to think! Dread on every year. Tomorrow's Christmas!" He shrugged deprecatingly. Something about the drooping half-smile of his mouth was pathetic.

A brindle and white mongrel paused for a moment in his excited search for scraps, eyed his companion quizzically, and returned resolutely to his sniffing.

"Turkeys and ducks and chickens, 's all they think of. Now and then bacon or ham. I used to think Christmas was different."

The young man rolled down his sleeves and reached for his coat.

"Even she—" his bitterness deepened, "with everything. Fifteen-pound turkey! Lord! I wonder what she'd think if she knew how I feel. More than likely doesn't know I'm alive, and me falling all over myself to save bits and pieces for her! Oh well, come on, Spud!"

Spud crunched a meat scrap reluctantly.

"All right. Finish that. No hurry." Martin strolled to the window and gazed out at the other festive shop displays. "Christmas 's just a day people take off to eat and give presents in, and if you don't know anybody and room out, there's nothing to it."

"One thing, Spud! Martin's voice brightened. Spud wagged a responsive tail without looking up. "In two months we'll have the mortgage paid off this joint! Gad, it's been a pull getting started in business. Ten long, long months to save two hundred dollars."

Outside a light snow was falling. Late shoppers, huddling along, laden with bundles, scarcely glanced at the tal young philosopher who, followed by a heterogeneous dog, strolled homeward. The excluding gaiety of Christmas Eve laughter and brightly lighted houses intensified Martin's loneliness. He passed the house where she lived and strained his eyes for a glimpse of her. In fancy, he told her about Spud, the market, and even hinted of his love for her.

From down the street a group of children enrolled "Silent Night." Martin smiled bitterly. He, too, had believed that story of the birth of a Christ child, once. A "prof" at college had refuted it. Too bad. Pretty story.

She had come to the window now to listen. How lovely she—D—n!

The carol had broken off into terrified screams. A car sped away. Martin found frightened children shivering over the writhing form of a boy. Martin carried him to the light. It was the fellow who bought bits of liver and now and then a scrawny soup bone.

The girl must have seen the accident for she had come out and was saying that she had called an ambulance. They both rode through the crunching snow to the hospital and waited silently.

"Not as bad as we had feared," the doctor finally announced. "Sad case, though. Little fellow is moaning now about who'll take care of his mother. Rent not paid, he says. Seems he's been earning all they've had. When I told him he might be here three months—well, I never saw a kid so down-hearted."

Martin hesitated. "I've got two hundred dollars," he heard himself saying. "If that would do the kid and his mother." He had a fleeting desperate picture of another ten months of saving and stalling off the second mortgage.

He walked home with the girl. Her name was Mary. A regular Christmas name, he said. She smiled.

"That was a beautiful thing to do, Mr. Bowman," she told him. "Did you notice the peace and happiness in that little fellow's face after the doctor had told him? Mr. Bowman, I—"

she hesitated. "I don't suppose you'd care to, but I—we'd like to have you eat Christmas dinner with us. I went up this afternoon to ask you, but you were entirely too busy to notice me and—"

"Too busy to notice you?" Martin gasped. "I thought you'd notice me!"

Spud had been waiting. His sleepy accusation as he arose from the doorstep was scarcely noticed. The song of the little injured caroler was running through Martin's mind and replacing a cynical philosophy.

"It was a silent night like this," he said. Thoughtfully, he looked up. In the east, one star seemed larger than the others.

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 13.—At a meeting held Wednesday night at the offices of the Keystone Automobile Club in this borough plans were completed for the first annual ball to be given in the Sixth Regiment Armory by Mizpah Commandery No. 96, Knights Templar, on the evening of Friday, February 17, with dancing from 9 until 2 and supper from 11 to 12.

In the preparation of this event which promises to be the outstanding social event of the season in the county each year, the committee worked out every detail. It is expected that close to 300 persons will attend the event, including several state officers of the fraternity, and Masons and invited guests from every section of Bucks county and the near cities. There will be cards during the evening for those in attendance who do not care to dance. The committee has instructed the music committee to secure an orchestra of national reputation for the event.

Harold H. Keller is general chairman in charge of the arrangements for the ball. Members of the general committee include Commander Edward B. Watson; Generalissimo, Harold H. Keller; Captain General, Alvin Eckert; Past Commander, Claude S. Wetherill; Past Commander, Arthur M. Eastburn; Past Commander, Walter M. Carwithen. Wednesday night the committee members elected W.
